Go+gerund

. We use go+gerund to talk about activities we do for fun in our free time.

. Go+gerund indicates the whole activity and experience , not just the action expressed by the verb.

. This structure is used with verbs that are not followed by an object.

. The verb “go” changes based on the verb tense we use.

II GRMMAR

How to use the Go+ing Grammar structure Correctly.

Now let's talk about using the go+ing grammar structure correctly

We conjugate the verb "go" into any verb tense, but the -ing form stay the same.

Here are some examples in a number of different verb tenses:

Present Simple: He gose running every day after work.

Present Continuous: They're going bowling this weekend.

Present Perfect: I've gone camping flve times this summer.

Present Perfect Continuous: She's been going hiking a lot recently.

Future with "Will": Sure,I'll going shopping with you

Future with "To Be Going To" : My sister is going to surfing in peru next year.

Past Simple: We went horseback riding during our last vacation.

Conditional: If I lived near a lake, I would go kayaking more often.

Modal Verbs: We could go sasal dancing on Saturday.

II GRAMMAR

Why We Use Go + ing in English

Here's what you need to understand about using go + ing:

We're talking about the whole activity and the whole experience, not just the action described by the verb.

Think about everything that's involved with going swimming: wearing a swimsuit, putting on sunscreen, walking or driving to the pool or the beach, swimming laps or enjoying the waves, getting wet and then toweling off afterwards.

When you say, "I'm going swimming," we get a mental picture of that entire activity, not just the action of swimming.

Go + ing gives us a mental image of the entire activity, start to finish.

If I just wanted to talk about the action of swimming, then I would say that: I swam 10 laps in the pool before work.

In that example, I'm just talking about the action I did to achieve those 10 laps.

(If you're wondering about the origin of this unusual grammar structure, check out this interesting discussion. In short, it comes from Old English. You'll sometimes hear it with the prefix "a-" in old songs, such as the popular Christmas carol "Here We Come A-Caroling.")

This related discussion references my explanation above, and provides references to research papers that delve deeper into the roots of this structure, for those who are interested.)

II GRMMAR

How to Use Go + Ing to Describe Fun Leisure Activities

First things first, we use “go” plus the -ing to describe leisure activities that we do in our free time.

A moment ago, I mentioned “running,” “shopping” and “dancing.”

In other words, we use go + ing to talk about activities that we do for fun.

You’ll notice that many of these activities are outdoor sports or activities that can be pretty physical, although we can also use go + ing with some indoor activities, as well as activities that involve collecting or hunting for things.

For example, we use this structure with these activities:

- go running
- go hiking
- go camping
- go kayaking
- go skating.

You can also use this grammar construction with multiword activities, such as these:

- go horseback riding
- go mountain climbing
- go scuba diving.

Like I said, you can use go + ing when talking about activities that involve hunting and collecting:

- go shopping
- go apartment hunting
- go berry picking.

V Reading to Writing:

Jordan's travel blog

Hi everyone! Or Gidday! This is how people often say "hello" in Australia. It's short for "good day!" We finally made it to North Queensland. It's tropical here, so it's very hot and humid, of course. The tropics are amazing. There is so much to see and do! It's never boring. We're having a really good time. The tropical jungle, or "rainforest," is beautiful. There are amazing tropical plants, trees and animals. Yesterday, we went hiking in the forest and this morning we went on a boat ride along a river. We saw lots of crocodiles, but didn't get too close to them! After that, we went windsurfing. The beaches are incredible, and it's not crowded at all. I think this is what I like most about this place; it's not touristy at all. It's peaceful wherever you go. Tomorrow we're going snorkeling on the coral reef. We're really excited about that. I'm writing this blog entry on the steps of our cabin. We're taking lots of photos, of course. More Tomorrow!

Jordan!
